Introduction

The role of the family in society is multifaceted and has a positive impact on individuals and communities. Families serve as the basic social unit, providing emotional support, care and education to their members. The main directions of the role of the family in the life of society are as follows:

1. Socialization. The family is the primary socializing agent that teaches children social norms, values, and patterns of behavior. Family members pass on cultural heritage, traditions, and moral values, preparing individuals for their roles and responsibilities in society.
2. Emotional support: Families receive emotional support and nurture the well-being of their members. Families provide a sense of belonging, peace of mind, and stability through love, care, and affection. Emotional support from family members is essential for individual mental and emotional health.
3. Education and skill development: Families play a very important role in early education and skill development. Parents or guardians are often involved in teaching children basic skills, educational values and knowledge before they enter formal educational settings. Families provide an environment conducive to learning and can encourage a lifelong love of learning.
4. Economic stability: Families are usually the basic unit for economic cooperation and survival. They support their members economically, provide them with financial resources, share tasks, and ensure that their basic needs are met. Family members often contribute to the overall well-being and financial stability of the household.
5. Social integration: Families serve as the primary source of social integration, providing a sense of community within the larger society. Family gatherings, holidays, and traditions provide opportunities for social interaction, bonding, and relationship building among relatives and extended family members.
6. Care and responsibility: Families are responsible for caring for vulnerable members, such as children, elderly parents, or disabled family members. Physical care, emotional support, ensuring their well-being are the main tasks that families undertake.

7. Transmitting cultural-historical knowledge: Families transmit cultural-historical knowledge through storytelling, shared experiences, and the passing of traditions across generations. This allows to realize the cultural identity and preserve and continue the heritage.

It is important to note that family structures and roles may vary across cultures and societies, but the importance of the family unit as the basic building block of society remains constant.

Family is a small society that unites several people with feelings of trust, love and loyalty. As long as every person lives in this time and space, his good deeds and bad deeds in this time also belong to the time in which he lives. The family has been considered sacred among all nations and peoples since ancient times. It is reflected in the works, written and oral sources that our ancestors have left for us. In ancient times, special attention was paid to family and family relations in the life of the Uzbek people. The role of the family is also important in our development as a perfect person. It is believed that children who benefit the society will be born from a knowledgeable and religious family. Family is the foundation of society. The family is the first place where the young are brought up. The family functions as a single unit, where parents naturally take care of the children and provide them with the necessities of life until they are able to support themselves. The fact that brothers and sisters take care of each other is also a result of the family environment. In the family, parents are also responsible for establishing decency and moral standards so that their children grow up to be responsible citizens. The role of parents in the family is invaluable. Because from every learned man and woman, learned and moral children will be educated. We must emphasize that raising a child should be treated as a matter of life and death in our lives. In other words, in our minds, if we do not reform and educate ourselves, we will have to face many difficulties in the education of our children in the future, and it is necessary for us to make mistakes. You and the children we raise should be conscious and responsible members of society. That is, we must remember one thing, a person can develop only in society. Communication and work with other people helps people grow and develop. Yusuf Khos Hajib writes in "Kutadgu Bilig" "A person who does not benefit other people is dead." What does he mean by these words? Being a member of society, we need to serve for its development and prosperity. In fact, a lot of attention has been paid to maintaining the family's place and status in society since ancient times. Sincere relations and affection of family members to each other are important in this family, peace of the family and harmonious living of family members are considered very important in the society. What are the foundations of family strength? In one of the blessed hadiths of the Messenger of Allah, peace be upon him, he said: "If a person marries and starts a family with good intentions, then half of his religion is perfect, and in the other half, let him fear God and fear God." That is, in this hadith, it is emphasized to make a decision based on the knowledge and morals of your partner even when building a family.¹
